Economy

2017 saw strong asset price escalation as the Dow was up 25%, the S&P was up 19% and real estate continued to see higher returns with rising rents and falling cap rates. Greenville/Spartanburg mirrored the national economy for job growth, declining unemployment and rising rental rates and lower cap rates. We believe the market will continue to expand and create solid returns for investors. We also expect the tax reform will have a positive impact on corporations and occupiers in the long-term.

Market Overview

The overall absorption for 2017 remained positive, with just under positive 400,000 square feet (sf) being absorbed in Q4 2017. Based on the amount of square feet under construction, of which about half is speculative, we expect to see a slight softening in the absorption number for 2018. This is very good news for the market. With vacancy at 5.8% end-of-year 2017, and rental rates are up 5% to 10% since the end of 2016, the market very much needs some new space brought online. As such, we are tracking about 3.0 million square feet (msf) of speculative space that is currently proposed, under construction or has recently been delivered. Despite its status as a tertiary market, Greenville-Spartanburg has the attention in the nation. There has also been continued influx of new national developers planting their flags, closing on land for both speculative and build-to-suit construction projects.

Overall Net Absorption/Overall Rent 4-QTR TRAILING AVERAGE

Several of the investment transactions in 2017 traded with sub 6% cap rates and additional transactions below this threshold are expected in 2018. As developers have acquired or tied up land, we have also made two interesting observations: Firstly, the price has doubled for readily developable industrial land sites since the start of 2014. Secondly, the market will need to address utility infrastructure needs, including water, sewer and natural gas, to continue progress for industrial demand as supply of large tracts that have all utilities in place is dwindling.

Outlook

It is expected that 2018 will start out with several lease transactions that will take a significant amount of space off the market. Additional large investment sales are likely to place continued downward pressure on cap rates. Rental rates should stabilize this year as a welcome addition of new space is added to the market. The strengthening national and global economies will be reflected in the Greenville-Spartanburg market via continued new investment and growth of existing industries.
